"Little bride's house dresses" are the cutest things imaginable, and so much more attractive for wear around the house than shapeless bungalow aprons. The little house dress is made of plaid gingham and one may have a serviceable plaid of dark color or the daintiest pink and white.

If HE prefers it. The style is altogether charming; a gathered skirt has two big, fancy pockets, and the panel bodice goes around to form gay sash ends at the back. Collar and cuffs are of white linen. Two snap buttons fasten the frock and the sash bow can be tied while you are running down to breakfast.

Fashion Note.

Hats are Spanish, Breton or American. The Paul Jones is dominant. The materials of which they are made are velvet, duvetyne and silk.

beaver, in the order in which they are made. The duvetyne hat has all the earmarks of its success, especially when it is rust, rock and brick color. The short veil of lace is attached to the tricorn and the marquis and also worn with broad Spanish hat with a pair of earrings of jet.

THE TIGER GIRL

By JACK LAWTON.

(© 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

The girl who was about to enter the room stood poised on the stair at sound of voices below. She heard her own name mentioned and waited. Her hair shone tawny in the window light, and her face was soft-tinted as a flower. The golden lashes veiling her yellow-black eyes glistened like sunny dewdrops. She stood calm, expectant.

"I call her the tiger-cat," her hostess was saying. "We had one once just like her, subtle, ever ready to stab with her hidden claws. Greedy for that which was—or was not her own. Claiming, by cunning or force, if might be. And yet, we could not part from the thing. It had an endearing manner of cuddling up to one, caressing with its yellow head or begging pardon with cushioned outstretched paws. That is Pauline. When I lose patience with her completely," Marion Dale smiled her confession. "Pauline is sure to come it over me one way or another. She can charm and conciliate women as well as men on those occasions when it suits her purpose."

The small person on the window seat turned so that the listener could see her face.

"Aren't you bitter, Marion?" she reproved.

"Bitter!" Mrs. Dale's tone expressed exasperation.

"It is you who should be bitter, Nell. With that woman taking Paul from you, before your very eyes. And only for a passing whim to show her powers, not that a public exhibition is necessary, mercy knows; for the men follow her about for a smile or a frown."

"I do not think," Nell said slowly, "that Pauline will throw Paul over."

Nell paused between the door draperies.

"Maybe," she suggested, "it might be better, Marion, to try to tame the tiger."

The golden-haired girl on the stair scorned to move as the one whose lover she had taken, came wide-eyed toward her.

"You heard?" Nell asked in consternation. Pauline nodded. She held out her white fingers amusedly to the sunlight and studied their shining nails.

"The tiger's claws," she quoted.

The hall was silent and deserted. Nell sinking down upon a lower step smiled bravely up at the girl.

"Pauline," she said, "tell me something of your earlier life in that far-away West. I think that you must have been brought up with people different from us. People living by a different code. To be so cynical one must be unhappy. It hurt me to hear you mock at sincerity. Now I believe in the good in every one."

The tiger-girl gazed through her half-closed lids. "Even yet?" she asked insolently.

"Even yet," answered Nell.

"And I could take your lover from you tomorrow," she declared.

"Take him, and keep him forever," she laughed, implying touching her pink finger tips to Nell's arm. "With my claws," she taunted.

"Unless," Nell quietly replied, "I think it best to clip your claws. I could do that."

The golden girl's smile was incredulous.

"You?" she mocked.

"Knowing Paul," Nell went on calmly, "do you believe that he would still care for you if he knew that you had deceived not only himself but others more cruelly? Paul is not that kind. His sense of honor is strong and he must believe beyond all question in the woman he loves. Or else love would leave him."

"When the maid brought up our letters this morning one wrongly addressed was tossed into my lap. She had mistaken the name, and I, thinking of other things, tore open the envelope absently and began to read. There was no other beginning to the letter than the word 'Dear.' It was from a broken-hearted man, whom it seems you had long ago charmed for your school girl diversion. But when you had carried the episode to the point of a runaway marriage merely to prove your triumph, you returned immediately after the secret ceremony to your parents, with a desire that the marriage be annulled."

"This they were able to accomplish, because of your minority. But the man, it seems, continued true to his love and sends now a further plea after all the years. Some men might overlook such a letter, but to Paul it would be the condemning revelation of your nature."

"And you are going to show it to him?" Pauline asked fiercely. From the pocket of her gray frock little Nell drew the letter. With firm hands, she folded it into the hands of her rival. "No," she said. "I'm going to give the letter to you. I happen to believe, you see, in good in others. So I shall leave it to yourself to be true. You will have to find your own way."

The clock on the landing ticked loudly; then the tawny girl spoke. "You have tamed your tiger, my dear," she said, "and you shall have your precious Paul. I never wanted him, anyway. But when she reached the top of the stair she stood, her finger tips pressed to her eyes; when she looked at the shining nails they were wet with tears. Pauline smiled tremulously. "Clipped Miss Tiger," she whispered, "and clipped—forever."
